

Ireland, Sean

From: Strange, Joel
Sent: Friday, May 29, 2015 12:24 PM
To: Ireland, Sean
Subject: RE: Pumpkinvine

I'm looking into it.

From: Ireland, Sean
Sent: Friday, May 29, 2015 9:46 AM
To: Strange, Joel
Subject: FW: Pumpkinvine

Joel, could you have the Corps look to see if there's a permit for this site? The citizen sent me another email this morning saying the developer is "excavating" again after the EPD visited the site yesterday.

Not to say there were/are not 402 violations at the site, but EPA 402 does not issue stop work orders and rarely does the EPD. Rather, the permit allows for 7 days to fix BMPs and update their SWPPP. The "excavating" problem would potentially be a 404 issue though, not sure specifically where this is happening.

Exemption 6 Personal Privacy

The citizen's name is . The grading company is Red Clay and the developer is New Towne. This is located in Seven Hills subdivision near Lullwater Court (and Lane) Dallas, Georgia, adjacent to Pumpkinvine Creek.
Thanks.

Sean Ireland
404-562-9776
Exemption 6 Personal Privacy

From: Cooley, James [<mailto:James.Cooley@dnr.ga.gov>]
Sent: Friday, May 29, 2015 8:59 AM
To: Ireland, Sean; Wix, Stacey
Subject: Re: Pumpkinvine

I am out of town. Bib Tatum of our office is looking into it. If you need any information in the next few days please contact Stacey Wix

Sent from my Verizon Wireless 4G LTE DROID

"Ireland, Sean" <Ireland.Sean@epa.gov> wrote:

Hi James,

I got a call from a citizen in Dallas late yesterday about discharge of sediment into Little Pumpkinvine Creek and I finally got a chance to call back a moment ago. I received a sample of the pictures (one attached) and I was told all sorts of things washed into the creek, e.g., sediment, pine straw, sheets of sod. I'm glad you were able to get out there promptly today.

The citizen also said they saw you on Lullwater Court near the start of the subdivision, but wasn't sure if you made it to the end of Lullwater Lane where the discharge goes into the creek. They also said the builder filled in jurisdictional wetlands. Any thoughts on the environmental conditions out there? It sounds like a bit of a mess. If you need any assistance, feel free to call.

Sean Ireland
404-562-9776, office

Exemption 6 Personal Privacy